The Animals and Society Institute has the resources you need!

1. We help to create and improve human–animal studies programs in universities and colleges
2. We promote scholarly work in human–animal studies and try to translate that work into material that human and animal service professionals and other scholars can access and use
3. We help to ascertain research priorities for the field, targeting topics that are under-researched, giving scholars venues to research and publish in those areas
4. We provide information and resources to help those who are working in areas of primary, secondary and tertiary prevention and treatment of animal abuse to accomplish their goals
5. We create and promote diversion and treatment programs to help human service providers identify, evaluate, treat and/or appropriately refer individuals who abuse animals
6. We provide scholarly resources to animal agencies and animal service professionals to allow them to use the most effective practices for their work
7. We provide evidence-based knowledge about human–animal relationships to those who work to affect policy and practices involving animals

Are you interested in studying or improving human–animal relationships?

Visit our website to find out how we can help!

http://animalsandsociety.org